

Excellence Has Its Own Award: NOVA

From around the Corporation, employees gathered at the Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C., June 27 to accept the 1997 NOVA Award, the Corporation's highest honors. Lockheed Martin Chairman and CEO Norm Augustine, President and COO Vance Coffman and Information & Services Sector President and COO Pete Teets joined with many current and former members of the Board of Directors to honor this year's recipients. Awards were presented to 31 individuals and 19 teams comprising 232 members. The four NOVA Award categories are Exceptional Service, Leadership, Teamwork and Technical Excellence. The Corporation salutes the NOVA Award winners:

DR. TIM P. TOOMAN, Representative
*Atmospheric Radiation Measurement-
Unmanned Aerospace Vehicle Team*
Sandia National Laboratories

For exceptional technical accomplishment, personal sacrifice and dedication in completing three remote research flight series, the results of which are of substantial importance to the international climate and meteorological research communities.
